SYNOPSIS

This is the story of a woman, Jennifer Banks, 23 years old, who applies for a job at “First Trip”. On the interview day she meets Steve O’Neil, a single independent guy without any kind of responsibilities, in the company’s waiting room. Two days later she receives an e-mail from “First Trip” saying that she isn’t hired because the company only accepts men for administrator, like Steve O’Neil. Jennifer feels discriminated against but she doesn’t give up. She starts fighting for women’s rights.

Later on, Jennifer applies for a position at “Travel & Living”, a rival company, which immediately hires her for administrator. As the story develops, Jennifer starts achieving superior goals and she receives an award for best employee of the year. She decides to donate the money to an association against discrimination, to help those who are mistreated and to ensure that a situation like hers can never happen again.

SAMPLE DIALOGUE

Jennifer (at work), phone ringing.

Jennifer answers the phone.

First Trip: Oh, congratulations, Jennifer! We know that you’ve won an award for best employee of the year. And “Travel & Living” are at the top because of you, so... we have reconsidered our answer and we would like to offer you our administration position, and double your income.

Jennifer: Sorry guys, you just don’t know where you’ve got yourselves into. (laughs ironically)
The best award I could possibly get is the one you couldn’t give me that time: equal rights for everyone! So, now I’m fighting against the poor mentality of organizations like yours, guys, who simply don’t care much about a fair society. Have a nice day!

Jennifer hangs up the telephone

SYNOPSIS

Susan Scott, 27, is discriminated against for being the only female worker in the office. She's the most hard-working person in the office but she gets the lowest salary. One day she decides to talk to her superior in order to change the situation. Unfortunately, he refuses to negotiate her salary and to make things worse he harasses her. She loses her temper and decides to make a stand. She goes to a arms shop, buys a gun and returns to her office. She shoots her boss and goes to jail. There, she declares she only did it because she was tired of being discriminated against and harassed. She knows there are many women like her and she should make a stand for them.

Meanwhile she says to a TV reporter "I did it for justice!" And with that statement, she leaves terribly upset with the local government and declares that women deserve the same salary and working conditions that male workers have
