Portuguese Women in the 60's

During the “Estado Novo” (Dictatorship), between the 30's and the 25th of April 1974, when Portugal became a free and democratic country, the ideal woman was the one who stayed at home raising her children and taking care of the house chores, waiting for her husband who went to work to support the family.

Normally, in those days, few women worked outside the home. Supporting the family was a man's obligation.
